Programme description	Inter-cultural communication (previously International Encounters in Culture) is Master program hosted by the Faculty of International Studies and Political at the University of Łódź, Poland. This new MA program is a part of the International Cultural Studies degree, and it expands research interests and topics of Bachelor's degree. The course is taught exclusively in English, and it is addressed to people whose professional careers will require expertise in cultural diversity communication. The program looks globally to provide an overview of different civilizations world-wide as well as locally, i.e. across the Euro-American civilization, its cultures and subcultures, and teaches students to understand individual differences found among people of different races, religions, sexual orientations and genders. It offers practical knowledge in communication in culturally diverse working environment and how to be culturally competent among people who have different worldviews, customs and religions. It also focuses on intercultural interaction at a global level, by exploring such topics as interculturalism, globalization, migration, terrorism and Postcolonialism. Last but not least the program draws on cultural representations of intercultural interaction, engaging with mass media, literature, and popular culture. Students will be introduced to research methods and strategies within cultural studies, literary studies and sociology, which they will use to write research-based MA dissertations.

Other areas covered by the curriculum include:

- Theory of Communication,
- Heritage and Cultural policies,
- Film Studies,
- New Media Studies,
- Gender and feminist theory,
- Race and ethnicity studies.

Intercultural Communication alumni will be experts at communication and problem solving in workplaces characterized by multicultural diversity. They will be prepared to work as trainers and counselors in multinational and multicultural corporations as well as in cultural institutions in the global market environment. They will also be able to seek employment in research centers, media (press, radio and television), publishing houses, advertising agencies etc.
