Programme description	Inter-cultural communication (previously International Encounters in Culture) is Master program hosted by the Faculty of International Studies and Political at the University of Lodz, Poland. This new MA program is a part of the International Cultural Studies degree, and it expands research interests and topics of Bachelor's degree. The course is taught exclusively in English, and it is addressed to people whose professional careers will require expertise in cultural diversity communication. The program looks globally to provide an overview of different civilizations world-wide as well as locally, i.e. across the Euro-American civilization, its cultures and subcultures, and teaches students to understand individual differences found among people of different races, religions, sexual orientations and genders. It offers practical knowledge in communication in culturally diverse working environment and how to be culturally competent among people who have different worldviews, customs and religions. It also focuses on intercultural interaction at a global level, by exploring such topics as interculturalism, globalization, migration, terrorism and Postcolonialism. Last but not least the program draws on cultural representations of intercultural
